

Briefing for Prince Schwarzenberg: team of 3 players.

Your Excellency!

You command the Army of Bohemia, the largest Coalition force in the field. You are also commander in chief of all coalition forces. In coordination with the armies of Blücher, Bernadotte and Bennisgen, for the past few weeks you have been forcing the French westwards, refusing battle against Bonaparte in person but attacking and defeating forces commanded by his marshals. Gradually the Corsican's forces have been shepherded back towards Leipzig, capital of Saxony. He is now surrounded on all sides by your armies. The time has come to destroy him.

It is 16 October 1813. Your army is deployed to the south of Leipzig. As befits the most important army in the field, you have the honour of being accompanied by the Emperors of Russia and Austria and the king of Prussia. Lucky you! This morning, you mounted several attacks along your front, which helped pin the French forces in place although your first attempt to turn the French right flank did not succeed. It is now early afternoon and it appears Napoleon is about to launch his own assault. You had planned to renew your attempts on the French right wing but Tsar Alexander has insisted that you recall your reserves from that side of the river Pleisse to face the French attack.

You have two subordinate players: Klenau, who commands Columns 3 and 4 on your right; and Constantine, who commands the Reserve Wing. You directly command columns 1, 2 and the Austrian Army Reserve.

Your objective this afternoon is simply to avoid defeat. If you can only do so, the pressure on the Corsican in the next few days from all the forces that surround him will be irresistible.
